

IGNTU Commemorated the 63rd Republic Day

Indira Gandhi national Tribal University, Amarkantak (M.P.) commemorated the 63rd Republic Day at its Second Campus, Lalpur with great national fervour. The Vice-Chancellor, Prof. C. D. Singh hoisted the tricolor at 9:30 am which was followed by several colourful performances by the students of the University which echoed the sky with the sense of patriotism.

The Vice-Chancellor, Prof. C. D Singh congratulated all on the occasion and remembered on the day how he started the University with limited resources and several hardships. He mentioned the struggles have not come to an end; we are still struggling for the link road clearance which the University has not yet received. Then Prof. Singh mentioned with great delight that amongst the newly established Universities our University is at the top rank in infrastructure and strength of students. He also announced to open a 500 bedded hospital and a tribal medical college; and the University is very soon going to recruit new teachers, declared the Vice-Chancellor. Prof. Singh emphasized on the value based education which the University targeting to achieve along with professional education since the students are the treasures of the University which will be known by their achievements.

He discussed how our students are setting new ideals for our society and he mentioned the name of Chamaru Singh Banjara, a student of the University, who has set an example by earning himself for his studies. Prof. Singh announced that very soon he will provide opportunities for self employment for the students. The students of the University will also be involved in such activities from which they can get experience and financial support to carry on their studies.

Prof. Byomkesh Tripathi, Dean, Faculty of Social Science and Science and Co-ordinator of the programme paid the vote of thanks and announced the closing of the programme.
